Gas chromatography

Gas chromatography is a common type of chromatography used in analytical chemistry for separating and analyzing compounds that can be vaporized without decomposition. Uses of GC include testing the purity of a particular substance, or separating the different components of a mixture.